Becoming fit for purpose

The Peel Regional Police in Ontario, Canada, was dealing with what many law enforcement departments face: it was structured in a way that didn't always make sense for the problems it was trying to solve. The chief wanted to remove barriers for his staff, not create them. The police service needed to relook at its vision and operations to determine its top priorities, including improved on-the-job technology, strategic innovation and community policing initiatives that build trust and relationships.

ESG

Tracking your environmental footprint

We all have a part to play in reducing our carbon footprint. But how do we know what kind of footprint we're leaving behind? And what options do we have to reduce our impact? It's not just something that individuals must think about—these are questions for all types of businesses and communities.

Transforming global shipping

Ninety percent of the world's traded goods travel by ship. However, the global shipping industry faces difficulties such as congestion and container shortages. A global data platform powered by blockchain could help. But first, antitrust and regulatory hurdles would have to be cleared in each of the many jurisdictions involved.
